Checkups

Just like cholesterol screenings, vision tests and blood pressure checks, you should get your hearing evaluated.

Is Good Hearing Something We Take for Granted?

Are you aware of your hearing loss? You may be surprised when friends and family suggest that you have a hearing problem. Today one in every ten Americans has a hearing loss. You are not alone. An invisible disability, hearing loss usually comes on gradually, and can cause frustration and stress for you, and the people you are interacting with on a daily basis.

Studies have linked untreated hearing loss to: reduced alertness, stress and fatigue, which increases the risk of personal safety. Research from Johns Hopkins University states that hearing loss is now related to both Alzheimers disease and dementia. Your ears and brain need to be stimulated again or Auditory Deprivation (a decrease in the ear/brain ability to understand speech clearly) occurs.

No one chooses to have a hearing loss, but doing something about it is your choice.

What puts you at risk for Hearing Loss?

Signs

- * Noise exposure (recreational or occupational)
- * Diabetics and/or smokers: Twice as likely to have a Hearing Loss
- * People over the age of 60
- * Cardiovascular disease is strongly linked to Hearing Loss (Better Hearing Institute)
- * Genetics - Hearing loss runs in the family
